WORK

While most of the university community is still snug in its bed or at least still putting on its makeup, its leader is already at his desk, poring over paperwork.

Interim President Roy Nicks, despite his temporary status, isn't about to let ETSU just float along. He made that clear when he took over the reins from Bert Bach in summer 1992.

Nicks has two plans that he hopes to accomplish while president. "The first plan is to improve relations of students which involves better services to students and a higher graduation rate," Nicks said. "The second part is to get the facilities and resources we need to improve the university. The first priority being a new library."

Meanwhile, the original search for an ETSU president—which began in the wake in summer 1991—was aborted in November; to the relief of many involved. "We felt like the search had been lingering," said Carl Moore, chair of the regents' Personnel Committee.

Faculty felt the search process would work if people would just leave it alone. "The faculty as a whole was very satisfied with the process," Jim Odom, instructor in the history department, said in November. "But individuals on and off the board tried to interfere with the process."

Is the man behind the big, sunlit desk at 7:45 a.m. yet in front of rows of still-empty bookshelves in this race at all? "The position is permanent," Nicks said. "But, I'm not. I'm gone on May 3."

Below, math students add up their chances of making pluses, not minuses, and right, outdoor classes make pluses with the breeze, but how are they doing under the new system?

to MAKE the GRADE

As if getting up while the moon's still high, searching endlessly for a parking space, then careening off to early class weren't bad enough, once you're in class, there's the new and improved plus-minus grading system to keep you on your toes.

The system went into effect fall semester, and according to Dale Cole, vice president of SGA, quickly became prime referendum material for spring campus elections. Reviews are certainly mixed.

Some faculty members prefer the precision or specificity of the system, which doesn't lump all 80s and 90s, and so on, in one grade level.

For students who score perpetually near the border of a higher letter grade, the pluses are a welcome change. But the rest of the students have to deal with those pesky minuses destined to bring down struggling GPAs.

"There's not much difference in a C- and a D," senior accounting major Amy Terry said. "If you're trying to improve a GPA, it doesn't help much."

But, who knows, the early bird might get the plus.

TIME... to CHANGE MAJORS

Instructions: Seek accreditation. It was everywhere you turned in 1992-93 at ETSU.

The university's concerns with the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education's less-than-positive spring report on the College of Education still hung like a cloud as fall semester began.

But ETSU wasn't about to play dead. The denial of reaccreditation was appealed. Tennessee Board of Regents Chancellor Otis Floyd in August sent NCATE President Arthur Wise a letter listing problems with NCATE standards, procedures and more. And the report from Wise was: "Action is under way."

Yet another setback was in store for the College of Education. While an independent panel saw a case for reconsideration, the Unit Accreditation Board did not. ETSU Interim President Nicks was surprised and puzzled. "At the hearing, we specifically asked 'What is the standard for cultural diversity?' Nicks said. "What does cultural diversity mean to NCATE?"

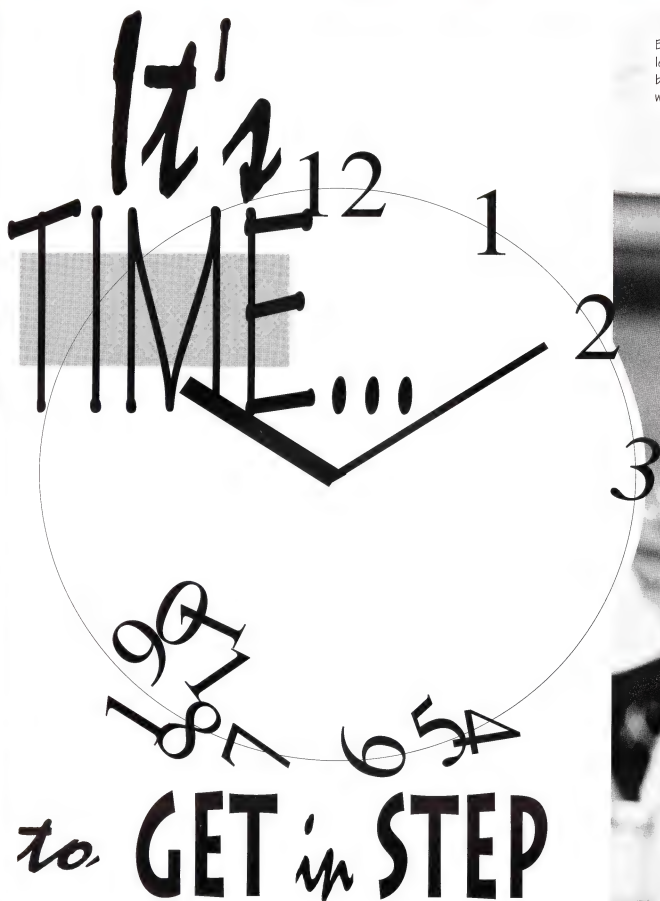

Then, as if the campus hadn't had enough of the word "accreditation," the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools dropped by in January — for a 10-year check-up visit and examination of the entire school. A campus committee had been helping prepare and revamp for this visit for about two years.

But another shock isn't expected with this reaccreditation process. In fact, the self-evaluation may have been a positive force for ETSU. "The most important thing," says Anne Sherrill, a professor in the English department and chairman of the Self-Study Report Committee, "is that this has been a tremendous campuswide effort. We have had over 300 students, faculty, staff and alumni participate."

Maybe accreditation isn't such a dirty word, after all.

Below, the marching band brass section lets go during a halftime show; and at bottom, the trio of drum majors salutes with precision.

Horns flare. Flags spin. Drums roll.
It must be the band again.

The ETSU Department of Music has had yet another year to blow its own horn about. Look at marching band, symphonic band and the basketball pep band.

"The bands are better all around," Director of ETSU Bands Paul Hinman said. "The department has grown, the quality of playing is better; individuals are more intense and focused, and the depth of quality players is better." As director of bands for two and a half years and sole director of the marching band for one year, Hinman has had ample opportunity to watch the bands grow and develop. "However," he says, "we've just scratched the surface. We've barely touched the potential for the program. It's really up to the students now."

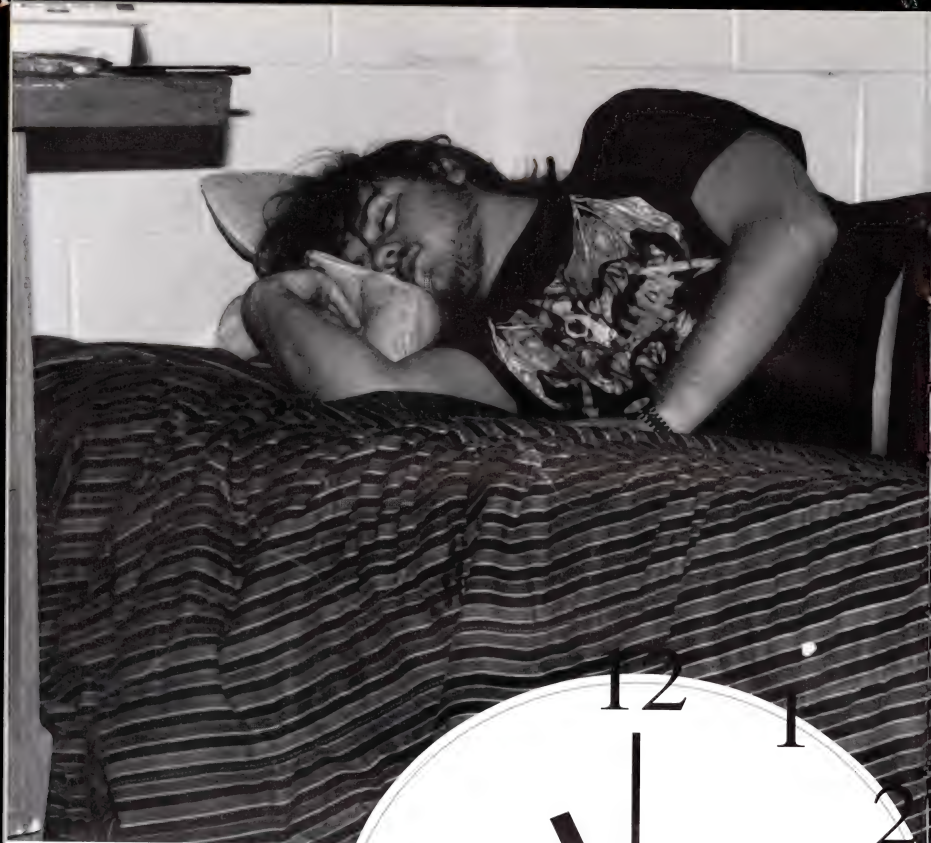

And the students seem to agree. One student said "This was the best marching season we've ever had ... all in all a very good year." And at the rate they're going now, there will be several more "very good years" yet to come.

Class has been in session for three hours. And now, the sun is shining, the birds are singing, but your day hasn't even started.

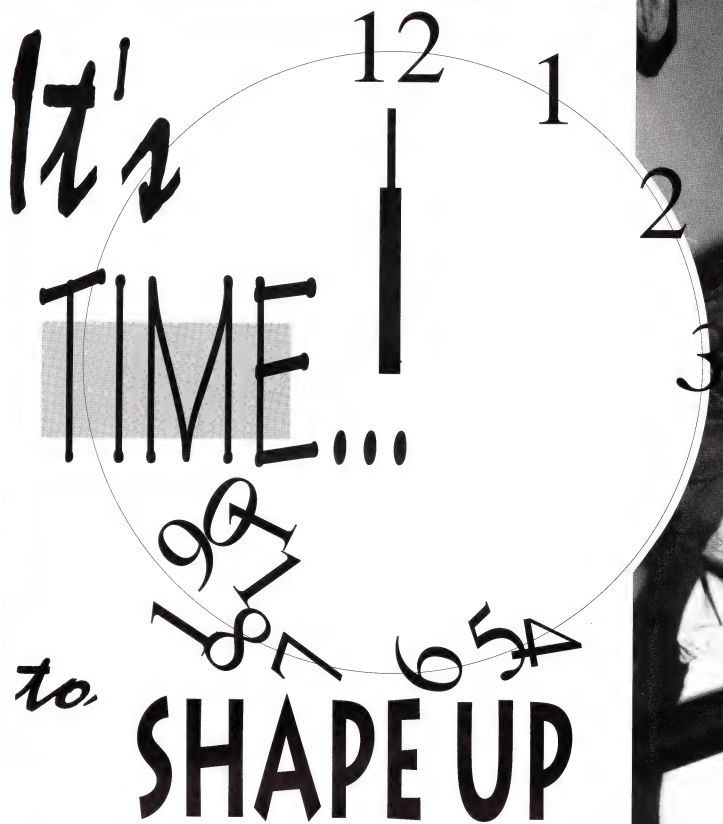

Time to decide: class or fun or sleep?

If it were up to the geniuses they would go to class. The night owls would choose sleep. And the party animals would choose fun.

"I used to sleep in my car," said senior Amy Dickeson. "I had a Z; it was all warm and cozy, and I would sleep."

After all, in most classes, you are allowed a couple of misses. Why not take 'em all at once? You only live once.

It's TIME... to SHAPE UP

Gone are the days of muscle-bound men and soft, rounded women. The '90s have rolled in and brought with them a brand new concept of anatomies.

The image of "sexy" for women has gone from the well-endowed, round squishy look of Marilyn Monroe to the toned, cut and stacked look of today's top sex symbols, such as pop-star Madonna.

Men? Muscles, muscles everywhere is what the women want to see ... But is it what they're getting? Lunchtime is obviously not weight-watching time on campuses.

Sophomore Kym McLeod thinks not. "Men seem to be more conscious of how the women around them look than they are about themselves anymore," she said.

Popeye, famous for his "I am what I am" line, must have rubbed off on the guys.

"Between classes and working to pay for classes," said broadcast major Darin Rodgers, "I'm happy to just get food in me. Who has time to worry about if it is good for me or not? Love me for me or not at all. I'm too tired most of the time to care."

And many males have quite a bit to love, especially around the midsection. Aren't men supposed to wait until after marriage to get those "love handles?"

Oh, well. Just how important is the outside packaging anyway?

"You're lucky enough to find someone you can just get along with," says human resource management major Stephanie Fellows, "It doesn't make any sense to pitch someone because their body is less than perfect."

It's 12:30 TIME... to GET <sup>in</sup> a LATHER

They're sexy. They're sinister. They're silly at times. But they're irresistible.

Beginning at 12:30 or 1 p.m., the young and the restless at ETSU become not only bold and beautiful, but they insist on following the guiding light all the way to Santa Barbara if necessary. Ah, well, these are the days of their lives, after all. They can watch what they want.

And they do. They have to. It becomes an obsession to find out what happened at the latest date rape trial or when Ridge leaves his wife to follow Brooke, his father's wife who's carrying the child of one or the other of them, to the family's mountain retreat. Soap fanatics have to have their daily dose -- even if they know these episodes are ridiculous fluff.

"They are really stupid," sophomore Kristi Nelson said. "The acting is so bad, the plot is so bad, but I still want to see if sex therapy will help Victoria."

Admittedly, it's morbid interest that lures some. Others can't even pinpoint why they are magnetized by the tube come afternoon.

"I don't know why I watch soap operas," said junior Lori Limbaugh. "It's something to do."

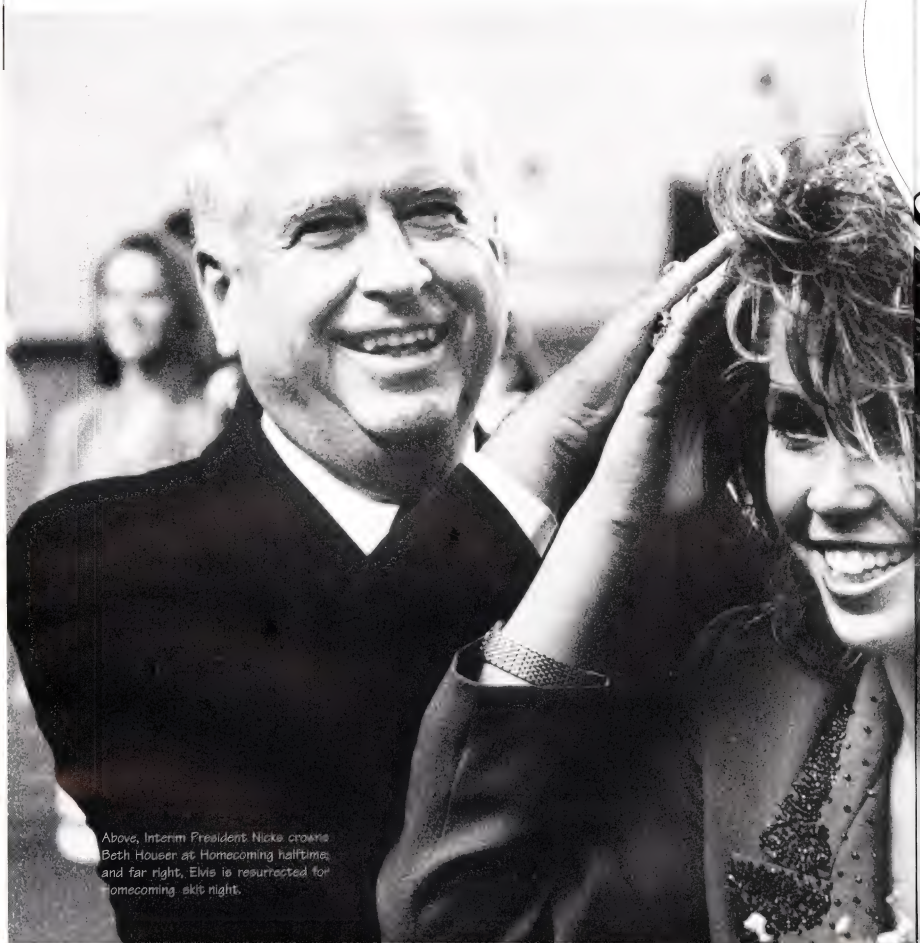

And do. And do. Or you might miss something!

Where else can you find HBO comedians and movie stars, step shows, zany skits featuring Elvis and Hitler, carnivals and games, bands and bluegrass, athletic contests from the Olympics to road races, pro golfers and a winning football team?

Just at ETSU's Homecoming '92.

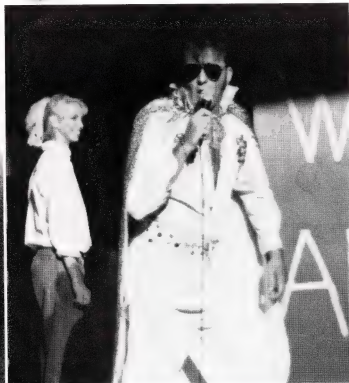

A week full of festivities in mid-October culminated in a weekend of excitement and cheers — just as homecoming is supposed to.

Talk show standout and now-movie star, standup comedian Paul Rodriguez spent Friday evening in scenic Brooks Gym, poking fun at country folks, among other targets. "Seems like every channel on the television here is about religion or fishing," Rodriguez said. "Someone's gonna really get rich when they figure out how to combine the two. It'd be called Fishing with Jesus."

Saturday's Homecoming game reeled in a whopper. Because not only would ETSU's revived football fans see the home team graciously humiliate Charleston Southern 62-0 but thousands of students and 29 participants held onto their seats and hopes as a Homecoming queen and king — Beth Houser and Dan Collier — were announced and ceremoniously crowned.

Add open houses, receptions, reunions, luncheons and dances, and you a winning combination.

to GET

University School, where many ETSU teachers' toddlers and teens begin their education and where many ETSU students begin their own teaching experience, is again an endangered species.

The university announced in October the ominous news that the school, encompassing first through 12th grades, occupies one of two sites for a new university library. A Future of University Committee took on the question of whether one of the last laboratory schools in the country serves a sufficient purpose to ETSU itself.

"We need the function that University School offers," said Norma Nutter, dean of the College of Education, which uses the school for student teaching, "but the answer, short of lying before God, is, 'No' (ETSU does not need University School.)"

Nevertheless, UH principal Sam Humphreys expressed optimism that "all parties can be satisfied." But when the yearlong committee made its recommendations in mid-October, including a suggestion that the administration seriously consider an alternative library site, ETSU Interim ETSU President Nicks said he would set up a task force.

That task force began cloaked in controversy—and secrecy. Its first meeting, in November, was closed to the public, the press and even former committee members. So, the fate of University School may be determined behind closed doors. Could be educational.

It's TIME to SPEAK OUT

As Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton and Tennessee Sen. Al Gore in fall 1992 revived American hopes and revitalized voting day vigor, ETSU's Student Government dynamic duo, Joe Smith and Dale Cole, were trying have much the same effect in a smaller political arena.

After years of historically low turnout, Clinton and Gore's landslide victory brought voters out in record numbers, leaping to as much as 70 percent turnout in some parts of the country. Campus experts cited the candidates' new openness as part of the reason for the voter deluge.

ETSU's Smith and Cole are also very open leaders. Perhaps, this new voter excitement will rub off on campus elections, which always have meager response.

"We are hoping for a good turnout this year," Cole said.

Immediately before the national election, many ETSU students explained the reasoning behind their lack of interest in "rocking the vote."

"I just never wanted to register to vote," Monique Young said, "because I really don't have a reason to."

So, what does ETSU's leadership team have in mind to get those campus voters to "want" to cast their ballots and stop coming up with excuses?

"We are going to put up posters and send letters to the organizations," Cole said. "We are also pumping up the plus/minus system, putting it on a referendum so students can vote whether or not they want it."

To CHANGE ROLES

Riddle: How many adult students does it take to make up an East Tennessee campus near the foot of Buffalo Mountain?

About half of the enrollment, that's how many, says Carla Warner, director of the Center for Adult Programs and Services at ETSU.

Adult students are a quickly and quietly mushrooming sector at universities across the country. ETSU is no exception.

"When I first came here six years ago, only 30 percent of all students were over the age of 22," Warner says.

Recent figures show that 49 percent of all students enrolled at ETSU are 23 years old or over. Thirty percent of all students are over the age of 35.

"I was surprised at just how many adult students there were here," said a member of Stage II, the adult student organization at ETSU. "I fit in pretty good."

ETSU is trying to reach this special group. "CAPS offers a variety of services for prospective and entering adult students," says Warner. "There appears to be a smaller pool of traditional students across the nation. More and more adults are coming back to school or are starting college for the first time."

Therefore, Warner said the university must keep non-traditional students' needs in mind when organizing programs and scholarships.

Adult students seem to agree. "Professors need to treat all students as adults," said another member of Stage II.

LONG NIGHT

It used to be that only vampires did it. But now, students at ETSU are coming out at night.

They're the brave souls that forgo prime-time television and hanging out with friends in order to learn.

Night classes are popular for a variety of reasons. Students with jobs during the day can take classes at night and learn while they earn a living. Some students, like junior Ron Barnett, 21, just like not having to go to class two or three times a week.

"It's a lot easier for me to take one class and get it over with," Barnett said. "They give me more time to get studying and homework done."

Whatever the reasons, ETSU now has more than 300 night classes listed in the course catalog. Either students are very interested in taking them, or a lot of vampires are into higher education.

It's TIME... to LAUGH a LITTLE

Feeling stressed out? Too much to do? No way you can accomplish it all? And, what's worse, no time for fun?

Join the college crowd, then. In case you hadn't noticed, almost everyone on campus is pulling their hair out, too. Goldfish gobbling used to be the collegiate trend. Now it's that lovely feeling of hopelessness and being overwhelmed. "There is a sense nationwide, that mental health staffs are seeing more distressed college students," says Phillip Meilman, college counselor and author of Beating the College Blues.

The pressure's bad enough early in the term when students have to eyesix or seven syllabuses full of assignments and research papers. But, then the end of the term arrives ... "Part of the blame (for student stress) could be put upon the instructors," ETSU student Barbara Holway says. "They feel that as time begins winding up, they have to speed up in order to get through everything."

But there are other causes of stress and it can happen anytime in the term. A bulletin board fall semester in ETSU's Yoakley Hall pointed a -- trembling -- finger at such fiendish culprits as credit cards, encumbrances, acne, parking tickets, colds, bills, and, of course, exams. Acne?

Deep-breathing exercises, avoiding grocery lines and planning can help. But ETSU's Campus Activities Board, well-known for its medical and mental health prowess, has another suggestion: Laughter. The best medicine, you know.

Felicia Michaels offered fall term stress relief, along with Paul Rodriguez and rising star Anthony Griffith, who cracked up a Homecoming audience. Then, CAB sent Jeff Foxworthy, who can relate to Tennessee's down-home rednecks, to let the air out of spring term pressures.

So, hey, when you can't beat the stress bug, laugh at the sucker.

Love in the '90s can be quite different than in our parents' days and then again, below, some things never change.

Matthew Dyer

Sex, love and dating. Dating, love and sex ... In a decade when sex can kill you and love just doesn't seem to last, where does it fit into our lives?

We are the generation of divorced parents for the most part, trying to form relationships by modeling ones that fell apart. Our mothers were products of women's liberation. Many of us watched as they juggled working a 40-hour-a-week job and having dinner ready when our father came home — if father was still around. So much for the love factor.

And we don't even want to think about our parents having sex. But they did or we wouldn't be here living off Doritoses and Ramen Noodles.

We all know how the dating game is supposed to be played. Boy meets girl. She has good teeth. He asks her out. He has a car, so she says, 'Yes.' A dinner, a movie or two and, bam, they fall in love, say their "I do's," indulge in maritally blissful sex, have babies and live happily ever after. "My mother always told me, 'Marriage first then have sex.' You need to save yourself," Leslie Bowman, a junior, said. "But my mom has been married three times!"

Nowadays, we skip the dating part, we skip the falling in love part and we dive right into sex. If the sex is good, we might hang around long enough to fall in love, and if we get that far, we may or may not go out a few times. "I don't think a lot has changed," said Mimi Kervick, a communication major. "It's just more open now."

But hasn't it changed? The fellas don't even have to buy the cheeseburgers anymore. Maybe it's all that women's libbing going around ... KAREN EIDSON

It's 9 p.m. the day before the big calculus test and you have yet to crack a book. But don't feel alone because there are about 12,000 other students that share your burden.

In the library, the smell of stress fills the air. With finals just two weeks away, this storage facility for books is bursting with excitement as students commit 13 weeks of notes to memory, hoping that missing a couple of classes won't hurt them too much. Giggles, sighs and the hum of conversation fill the air as students take their noses out of their books, for just a moment. After all, studying is not the entire reason for college.

Two guys pass by, discussing the plans for the rest of the night. The library will close in a few hours, and the night will still be young.

"So, is she going tonight?"

"No, I guess not."

Some students sit with blank looks on their face. Others bob their heads up and down with the music playing on their Walkmans. And most everybody fans themselves with the notes they aren't using at the time. It's stifling.

Why do students wait until the last moment to study? "I have better things to do," said senior surveying major Arron Ottinger. "I just don't feel like studying."

Maybe future generations will breed a race of bookworms, but for now, procrastination is the key to exams.

It's approaching midnight. You're already yawning. You had class at 8 a.m., had to leave for school by 7:30 and you don't get off until 2 or 3 a.m. -- if you're lucky.

These "lucky" students have the privilege of bartending, waiting tables, ringing up cash registers or cleaning up other people's messes until the wee hours of the morning. Then, they get to sleep a couple hours -- if they don't have to study -- and go back to school early the next morning.

But it pays the rent. And the phone bills.

"Bartending is a great job while you're in school as long as you don't have early classes," said PR major Michelle Shell, a longtime bartender locally. "You can make more money in two or three nights than someone who gets paid by the hour and has to work 30 or more hours a week."

There's little glamour, Shell says, and lots of hard work. "Some days you don't feel like being Superwoman, especially after being in class all day," she said.

But it'll all be over in four -- or five -- years.

It's 11 p.m. All is well. But come 2 a.m., a door slowly opens and a head peeks out. The coast is clear: A girl and a guy sneak down the hall, open the door to the stairwell and ... Walk right into an R.A.

Residence assistants are constantly on the lookout for visitation violators and are constantly amazed by some of the ways people try to enter the dorms "after-hours." Sophomore Henry Washington has been an R.A. in Cooper Hall for a year. In that time, he has seen many clever plays made by guys trying to get a little extra cuddle-time.

Some of Washington's favorite stories included girls sneaking through windows and pretending not to know about visitation cards. Washington said that he went into a room to get some money a guy owed him and the guy had tried to hide the girl in the bed. "Her hair was sticking out," Washington said. "And, I caught her."

Senior R.A. David Hutchinson knows of even stranger schemes. "I've heard of guys dressing up like girls and girls dressing up like guys," Hutchinson said.

Even if you get caught, as Washington put it, "R.A.s aren't trying to be spiteful or be like your mom, they're just doing their job." Ah, dorm life ... Know of any good apartments?

And then the self-proclaimed salvation for all lonely men appears before your eyes on that magical TV screen, almost as fascinating as the remote control itself.

"Hi, I'm Brenda and I'd like to be your friend on the other end," the commercial says. "So why don't you call me now at 1-900-Hot-Hott."

Ah, the joys of college life. But if calling is the next best thing to being there — why not take a short ride and actually be there?

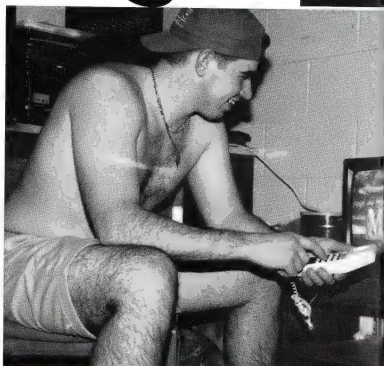

Who says Johnson City doesn't have all the modern amenities to offer college students?

Show bars are popular places for college students to go if they want somewhere to "hang-out" or if they just have nothing else better to do. With "Bottoms-Up," "The Hour Glass," and "TNT," Johnson City has more to offer than Knoxville.

It costs a few dollars to get in. Add the cost of beverage and tips for the dancers and your wallet will end up a lot smaller when you leave. So, why spend all that money? Sunni, one of the six dancers at Bottoms Up said, "I think most college guys come because they've never been to a show bar."

When the guys were asked why they go, the answer was unanimous: "It's just something to do."

to KICK OFF a NEW ERA

At one time, fans had gotten used to the idea of uneventful Buccaneer football. But that all changed with the beginning of the 1992 season.

The Buccaneer football team opened with the season with a 18-16 upset victory over the VMI Keydets. For the Bucs, it was their first victory, and game, under new head coach Mike Cavan.

The Bucs ended the season with a 5-6 record, only one game short of a winning season. But, Cavan, not dwelling on the past, but looking toward the future. "I'm not satisfied with being 5-6," he said. "We did improve as the season went along, and I'm happy about that."

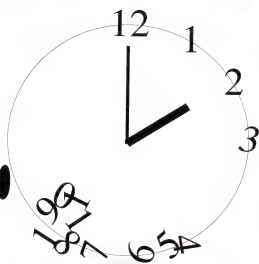

So, as Cavan plans out the game plan for the 1993 season, the fans can only sit back and wonder.

... and MAKE A PLAY for NEXT YEAR

With a successful season behind them, the Buccaneer football team has begun to focus on the 1993 season.

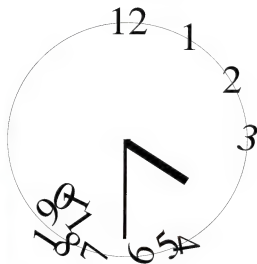

Head Coach Mike Cavan has a plan for next season, and it begins with good students, not just good players.

"I'm concerned about bringing student athletes to ETSU not as just football players," he said. "Kids need an education and it should be the most important thing. Football is just secondary."

Cavan is planning to take the Bucs as far as possible, and it all begins with good recruiting.

"We can play for and win championships," he said. "They probably won't come next year. It'll take two or three good recruiting years, but I know we'll get there."

New to the basketball players this year is a new schedule format.

The Southern Conference Athletic Directors took action to change the previous schedule after learning that players were having problems concerning their class work.

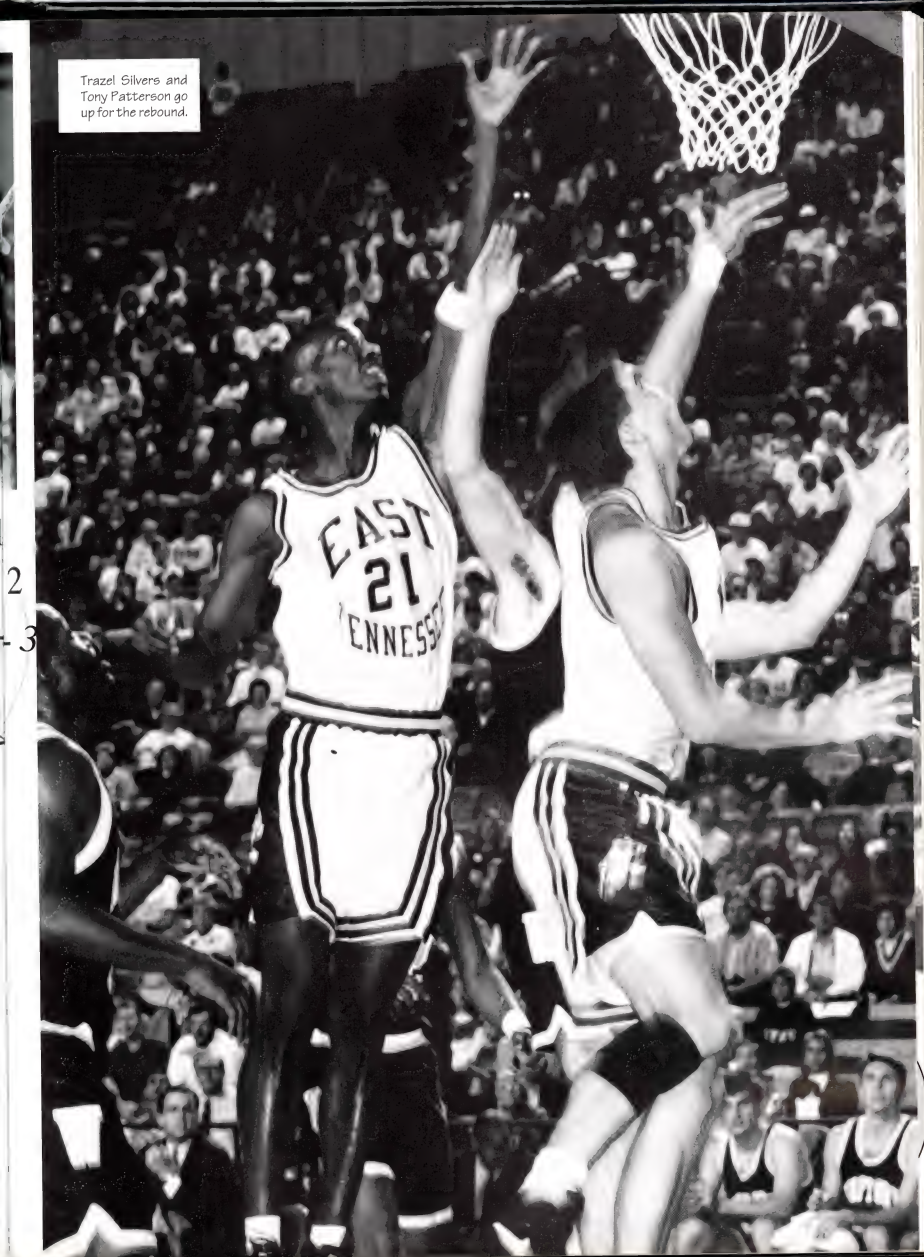

"Some students were missing classes because they had to play on Saturday and Monday," ETSU Athletic Director Janice Shelton said.

The new schedule, which will affect both men's and women's basketball and women's volleyball, does make sense in some ways Shelton said.

"One change is that games that are being played on Wednesday are within a few hours driving time from the school; therefore, the student involved won't feel so mentally and physically drained," Shelton said.

for a COMEBACK

A difficult schedule had a lot of fans wondering just how successful the Lady Buccaneer 1992-93 basketball campaign would be. In addition to new competition from Wake Forest and Georgia Southern, the Bucs must deal with playing 16 road games.

"I'm totally optimistic," senior Sue Harris said. "I wish we had more home games, but I like to travel so I am fired up and ready."

Harris said playing so many games on the road doesn't worry her because playing bigger teams will help promote the program.

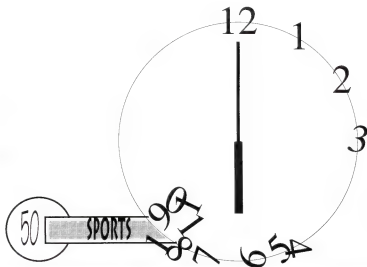

Other teammates agree.

"I think it will be a goo experience," sophomore Yvette Granger said. "Playing tougher and bigger can only help us."

There are even player who think the team has improved over last year's squad. Sophomore DeShawne Blocker, last year Southern Conference "freshman of the Year" can't wait to get the season started.

"I'm very excited about our players this year," Blocker said. "We are quicker and stronger."

By February, the Lady Bucs had gained sole possession of third place in the Southern Conference. But, when Furman came to town, a three conference game winning streak had been snapped.

However, the Lady Bucs are not making up any excuses. Although a young team, the Lady Bucs are not using age as an excuse.

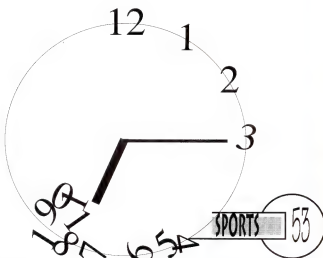

"There's a time when 'youth' is an excuse," Head Coach Debbie Richardson said. "And a time when 'youth' is a reality. We did not sustain our intensity in the second half against Furman. It's something that is learned through experience."

to SERVE it UP

As the spring semester came to a close, the men's and women's tennis teams both done well in the Southern Conference Tournaments.

The men finished first in the tournament and had a regular season record of 19-5.

Buccanner standout Yaser Zaatini became the first player in Buc tennis history to ever compete in the NCAA Championships and hold a collegiate national ranking.

The women ended their play with a fourth place finish in the tournament and a season record of 13-4. Kim Toohey was named the 1992 Southern Conference's most outstanding player.

The fall season started off slow for the ETSU golf team. But, by the fourth tournament, the team had gotten into the swing of things.

The Bucs won their first tournament at the third annual Old Dominion/Seascape Invitational in Kitty Hawk, N.C. For the team, it was their first win since the Pan-American Intercollegiate in 1990.

"The first three tournaments were disappointments," junior Hank Kim said. "We played hard and did the things we were supposed to, but we were not able to win. I don't know the reason."

Whatever the reason was, the team was determined not to dwell on what could have been, but rather focus on the up-coming spring season and add another Southern Conference victory to their list of accomplishments.

... and DRIVE IT HOME

Last April, the Buccaneer golf team made it four in a row as they finished first in the Southern Conference Tournament.

Hoping to keep the "drive for five" alive, the team opened the 1993 spring on Feb. 2 and had a week to prepare for their first tournament in sunny San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Head Coach Fred Warren said he is looking forward to having a good spring season, although the Bucs are sporting a very young team.

"We have the talent," Warren said. "We'll either be starting three freshmen, a sophomore and a junior or two freshmen, two sophomores and a junior."

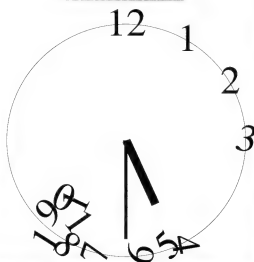

Warren will be looking to two players to be the team leaders. Junior Hank Kim and sophomore Jon Mathias are going to be key to unlocking a fifth consecutive title.

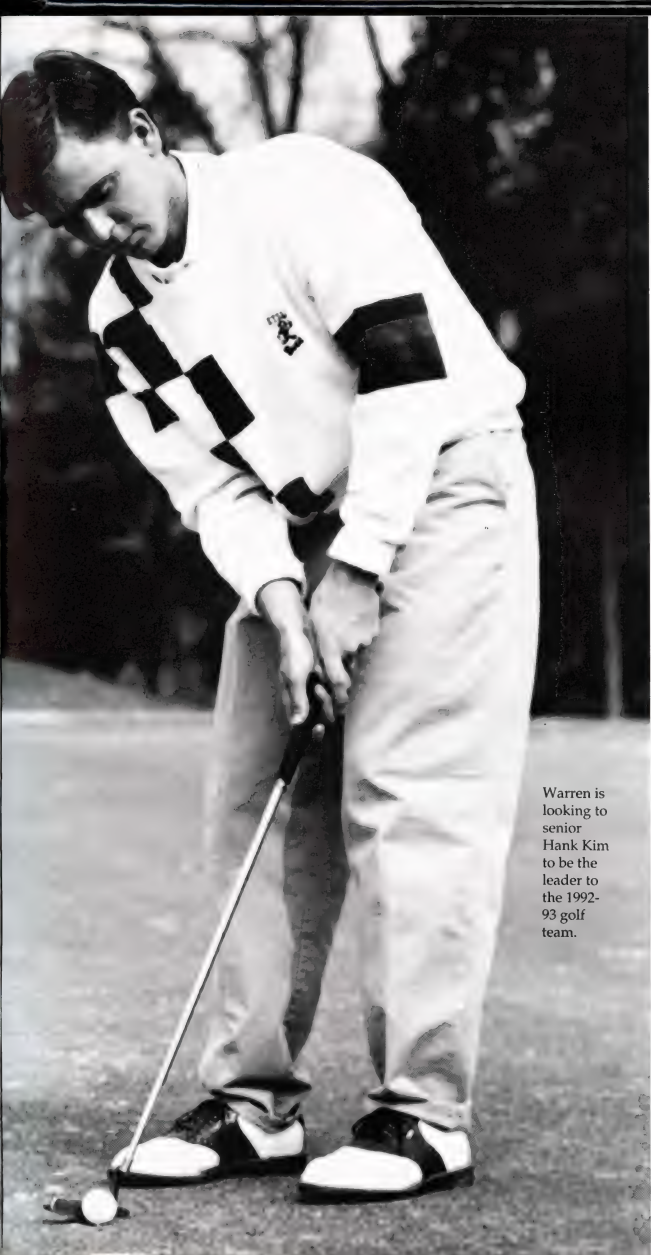

If the Bucs do win the Southern Conference, they will tie the record for most wins held by another ETSU team.

Victories are visiting more regularly as the season winds down for the Lady Bucs volleyball squad.

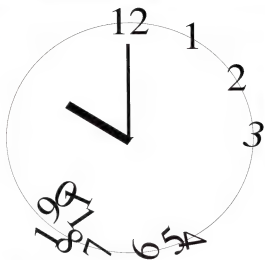

A win over the Western Carolina was the sign of significant improvement that the Bucs had been waiting on all year.

"We really played the whole match as a team last night," sophomore Tish Wilson said. "Our passing game was on, and we're pretty tough when it is."

The win marked the end of a month and a half-long road trip.

"It kind of felt weird hearing cheers when we did something well," Wilson said. "It was good to be back."

DAVE WALKER

TIME ... to MAKE a RUN FOR IT

Seamus Power and Rick Patterson played tag this past year for the Buccaneer Cross-Country team, finishing together in nearly every race the two ran.

And as this top ETSU team prepared for the NCAA District III Championships, it was the Power of Seamus that kept the dream alive for the harriers. "We have confidence in him," said junior runner Michael Saunders. "We know he can run with the top guys in the nation. He's our yardstick."

But even with its yardstick on hand, the team realized it would not be a walk through the park to the NCAA tournament.

"We are in the biggest and strongest division in the nation," said senior Denis Barry.

Head coach Dave Walker agreed with his team. "Our work is cut out for us. Six of the best teams I've ever seen are in the district this year. We must put on our running shoes and get our minds set."

1992 USAIR COMPETITORS

ETSU held its 16 annual invitational track and field meet Jan. 28-29, as USAir sponsored the event for the third year in a row.

The coordinator of the meet, ETSU Head Track Coach Dave Walker, seemed to think that things went well.

"I thought it was a good show on Saturday," he said. "We had some good jumps and throws."

Walker said that although there wasn't someone who came out of nowhere to upset the competition, he felt that Michele Freeman was a nice surprise, saying that she would do some good things in the future.

He also said that he thinks that '92 gold medalist Gwen Torrence has to be considered a favorite in the '96 Olympics. "She (Torrence) is one of our best runner for '96," he said.

But, it wasn't just the big names that impressed Walker. He was also pleased with the performances of his runners.

"Seamus Power ran a good race with some pretty tough cookies in the provisional qualifier," he said. "I think he ran good enough to qualify for the Indoor Championships."

"Patrick Davoren also ran a good race in the mile. He was quite a bit back, and it was interesting to see if he would quit, but he didn't"

JAMES WALKER

This is yet another stellar action shot we couldn't do without. Maybe this picture from USAir will actually have people running in it. Although, I really liked those pole vaulters NOT vaulting.

It's TIME... to HIT IT

Last year, the Buccaneer baseball team finished next to last.

In 1992, the Bucs made a recovery and jumped to third place with a record of 11-7. For a team that had not had a winning season since 1983, it was a mixed blessing. "We're having a good season," Head Baseball Coach Ken Campbell said. "You always want to come in first. But to finish third... We're not happy, but we're not unhappy."

Just as Coach Campbell expressed some discouragement about the team's finish, team members had their own feelings. "Naturally, we're disappointed," said Dallas Rinehart, ETSU pitcher/left fielder/second baseman. "But, we've got a lot to be proud of."

As classes go, some are fun. Others are necessary. Although some chemistry students secretly hope that a mixture of the right acids, bases and knowledge will blow up the lab, they know deep, deep, deep down in their heart that chemistry is important to their future.

Other students have the good fortune to be talented enough to be able to sit outside and draw the world around them, while the rest of us can only admire and remember.

Then, there are classes like jewelry making when using your mind and hands create gifts to show off to your parents what you have learned.
